

Natural Burial Grounds

ADELAIDE — CEMETERIES

Adelaide Cemeteries offers two uniquely different natural burial areas, Wirra Wonga at Enfield Memorial Park and Pilyu Yarta at Smithfield Memorial Park. Developed and managed using Australian native plantings, these areas have been designed to be diverse and self-sustaining ecosystems flush with birds and other wildlife.

The process of natural burial involves the preparation of the body for interment without the use of embalming fluid or chemical preservatives. The remains are placed in a biodegradable coffin, shroud or urn and laid to rest, allowing them to return to the earth naturally.

To help create and preserve the environment, traditional headstones are replaced by native plantings and each grave is micro-chipped to allow current and future generations to locate the final resting place of their loved ones. While there is no physical identification at the grave, families can choose to have the deceased's name and date of death inscribed on a communal memorial stone.

Our experienced Memorial Sales team will be more than happy to discuss options and take you for a tour. Bookings are requested to ensure staff availability.

Wirra Wonga - Enfield Memorial Park

Amid the sweeping expanses of manicured lawns and stunning roses of Enfield Memorial Park is Wirra Wonga, South Australia's first natural burial area.

Adopting its name from the Kurna term for 'bush grave', this rare woodland environment borrows from the adjacent Folland Park Reserve, using native vegetation that existed in the northern metropolitan area prior to European settlement. Species include Eucalyptus dumosa (White Mallee), Eucalyptus porosa (Mallee Box), Acacia acinacea (Wreath Wattle) and Senna artemisioides (Cassia).

This living and lasting natural memorial area provides for both single and companion burials as well as the interment of cremated remains.

A quiet contemplation space set within the burial area provides visitors with a special place to reflect and remember those that have touched their lives.

Pilyu Yarta - Smithfield Memorial Park

Set idyllically within the bushland environment of Smithfield Memorial Park, Pilyu Yarta, the Kurna term for 'peaceful ground', has been specifically designed using eucalypts and native wild flowers to create a rich, diverse and self-sustaining ecosystem.

Teeming with colour and life, this environmentally sustainable interment option provides for both single and companion burials as well as the interment of cremated remains.

A quiet contemplation area provides a peaceful space for loved ones to reflect and remember.
